A SSISTANT QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE, FORAGE AND RIVER TRANSPORTATION SEVENTH STREET WHARF, WASHINGTON, D. C., August 25, 1864.

OIRCULAR.

In accordance with instructions from Brigadier General D. H. Rucker, Chief Quartermaster, Depot of Washington, I have placed schooners at Upper and Lower Cedar Points, in the positions occupied by the light boats, previous to their destruction by the rebels.

From sunset until sunrise a light will be swung from each of the schooners. The reason given by captains of vessels, chartered and owned by the United States Quartermaster Department, for anchering in the Petomac river at night, was, that they feared that they would run their vessels aground if they attempted to run past the shoals after dark. The lamps placed on the schooners will give a light sufficiently strong to enable all pilots to pass up and down the river with safety, provided they govern themselves by the charts provided by United States Coast Survey.

From and after this date, no vessel propelled by steam will be allowed to anchor, excepting in such weather as by running the loss of the vessel or cargo might be endangered.

All masters of vessels are directed to report any neglect on the part of the parties on board of the light schooners, in not keeping their lights burning at all hours of the night.

A copy of this circular will be kept posted in the pilot house of every vessel owned and chartered by the Government, plying on the Potomac river.

British Press on the Seizure of the Geor-gia-Discussion of American Affairs-Persistency of the North Acknowledged. NEW YORK, Sept. 6 .- The steamship Scotia from Liverpool on the 27th, and Queenstown on the 28th, has arrived. The United States steamer Iroquis left Havre August 24, and proceeded towards Boulogne. The Daily News and the Morning Post both have editorially shown that the seizure of the pirate Georgia was legal, and that the British Government cannot interfere, as the Confederate war vessel could not legally be sold in a British port.

The Liverpool Courier editorially states that Bates did not purchase the Georgia till the custom authorities informed him she could be registered as a British vessel, and she was accordingly registered. It also publishes evidence that her charter for the service of the Portuguese Government was bona fide. The Army and Navy Gazette admits that the Federal successes at Mobile is considerable. and as regards peace, it declares its belief that the existence of a peace party is mythical, and that as long as there is a ray of hope North, it will march onward to its end of empire.

A Great Battle at Atlanta-A Reverse Admitted. The Richmond Sentinel of Saturday says: "A heavy battle is reported to have been begun at Atlanta on the evening of Wednesday (31st August) and resumed on Thursday morning (1st inst.) Gen. Harkee, with S. D. Lee and Claburne, is said to have begun the fight and gained some advantage at first but subsequently lost it. Gens. Patten, Anderson and Cummings are reported wounded.

"Official advices from Gen. Forrest, of the 1st instant, have been received. He reports that the enemy have evacuated the Memphis and Charleston Railroad up to Memphis, and that the Yankee troops are moving up the Mississippi river, en route to Virginia and

No DEAFT.—There will be no draft in New York city or Brooklyn. The credit to the State for naval enlistments was finally arranged and approved by the Secretary of War on Saturday. New York city is credited with 18,448 men; Brooklyn. 6,046; Buffalo, 1,328; other portions of the State, 1,807; previously credited, 117; total, 27,746. The Government notifies General Townsend that the present bounties to recruits will be continued until further orders.—N. Y. Tribune.

The London Times estimates that the total importation of cotton into Great Britain for the year 1864 will bear a fair proportion of the ten million hundred weight received in the height of its trade with America. The importations of cotton from all directions have increased since the great falling off in 1861, at the rate of one million hundred weight semiannually. GVA SONIVASO

The rebel General Hood, who com-manded at Atlanta, is described by a person who has recently seen him as a "white headed, homely, spindle-shanked fellow, about thirtytwo years of age, and over six feet tall; had been pretty well hacked to pieces; one leg gone, an arm useless, a lot of brulsed ribs, and a broken collar-bone.

The position of the Union troops on the 30th of April was as follows:—Gen. Howard's Army of the Tennessee, which had the right of the line, having crossed the West Point rail-road nearest to Fairburn, had pushed forward in an oblique direction, and was therefore near Jonesboro, while his communicating force—the Army of the Ohio, under Gen. Schofield—passing over the railroad nearer to Red Oak, crossed the country in a more direct line, and found itself near to Rough and Ready, and on the extreme left of the Union army. Both these places are stations of the Macon railroad, but about eleven miles apart. It was therefore necessary that the gap between those wings should be filled, and the Army of the Cumberland, under Gen. Thomas, and which had marched along the route in two columns, behind the Armies of the Tennessee and Ohio, now came forward to the front and formed the centre of the main army. Sherman's line was therefore eleven miles in extent, and ranged along the Macon railroad from Rough and Ready to Jonesbero,

Jonesboro, and was also entrenched. The cause of this separation of the forces arose from the fact that Hood had found out by Kil-patrick's raid that it was necessary that he should protect his communications at this post by a large force to prevent a repetition of such a catastrophe as had taken place at that part of the line on the 20th irstant. He certainly had not expected so speedy a movement of Sherman's whole army in the same direction, or he would not have been likely to have com-mitted such a military blunder. Sherman's army was, therefore, between the enemy's forces, and had, as was announced from the War Department, literally out the rebel army command, locating the salient or projecting angle within half a mile of the railroad. This the enemy did not approve of, and an attempt was made to drive off the Union troops from the position, doubtless supposing the force to be merely a raiding party. The rebels attacked Gen. Howard's works at about 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the 30th of August, and were easily repulsed. Meeting with so unexpected a force, the rebels fell back into their works at Jonesboro, leaving their dead and wounded in front of Gen. Howard's lines.

them so, and thus conquer them in detail. He field) and centre (Thomas) rapidly to the railroad, where they made a good lodgment, and during the 31st of August, nearly the whole disboro was despoiled of its railroad track, ties and other material. These two armies were also brought nearer to the intrenched position at Jonesboro, and to the left of Howard's command. By this plan of operation Sherman had interposed his whole army between Atlanta and Jonesboro.

remained in Atlanta, finding that he was out-flanked, his line of supply cut off, and the Union troops between him and a large portion of his army, became speedily convinced that the rebel position was untenable. In order to eave the portion of his command with him, he determined to evacuate the fortified city, and on the night of September 1 he blew up his magazines, destroyed all his supplies that he could not remove, consisting of seven locomo-tives and eighty-one cars, loaded with ammu-nition, small arms and stores, and left the place army of observation, soon discovered the position of affairs at Atlanta, and on the morning of September 2 moved his forces from the Chattahoochie river and occupied the place. He captured in Atlanta fourteen pieces of artillery, many of them in first-rate condition, and a large number of small arms. Value of Atlanta.

The value of Atlanta can best be understood by the desperate efforts the enemy have made to hold it, and by the earnest remarks respecting it that have appeared in the rebel journals since the commencement of the campaign. In April last the Georgia papers urged upon the rebel government the necessity of holding the Southwest, and as our armies have advanced so have they daily called upon the rebel army to defend Atlanta to the last. The orders to Hood were explicit on that point, and only on condition that he should hold the place was he given command. He certainly has endeavored to do so, but he has found his match in Sherman. The following extract from the Columbus (Ga,) Times of April 22 will be found in-greater importance to our enemies in a political point of view than in any other sense. With our capital in their possession, we would find additional influence brought to bear against us abroad; but as a material loss its fall would in no manner compare with the disadvantages which would result from a defeat of Gen. Johnston and the occupation of Georgia that would follow. The first point is near our boundary lines, the second is our great center. To lose the one would be as the loss of a limb; should we be driven from the other, it will be a terrible blow at our most vital point. This we must admit, and our enemy knows it."

THE BATEMAN SCANDAL IN ENGLAND .- In the Middlesex Sessions, Aug. 22d, Mr. F. H. Having placed his troops in the desired position, General Sherman, on the 1st of September, ordered a general attack upon the enemy at Jonesboro. The movement was made with great gallantry, and after an amount of skirmishing and artillery firing an assault of the works was ordered. The Fourteenth corps, under the command of Brevet Major General Jefferson C. Davis, was selected to make the assault, and gallantly they charged upon the works amid a storm of grape and canister from the rebel artillery, nothing daunted the brave boys who had so attribute to restrict the state of th boys who had so stubbornly resisted the efforts of the rebels at Chickamauga, who had formed the advance of Thomas' forces at Chattanooga, and who had bravely held their own throughout the Georgia campaign of 1864rushed upon the intrenchments and carried them handsomely, capturing about a thousand prisoners and ten pieces of artillery. General Sherman speaks highly of the conduct of the men of the "gallant Fourteenth," and officially awards to Gen'l Jeff. O. Davis the honor he has so bravely won.

During the night the enemy, finding it impossible to hold Jonesboro, retreated along the Macon railroad in a southerly direction and took up a position at Loveloy's station, seven miles distant, and twenty-nine miles from Atlanta. Here they threw up hasty intrenchments to prevent the further pursuit of our cavalry, which had followed them to this point, inflicting damage on their rear and causing confusion
